Close to 1,000 housing professionals, government officials, and private sector partners to gather at the 2025 ONPHA Conference to explore future-focused housing solutions

October 30 – November 1, 2025, Sheraton Centre Toronto Hotel

Toronto, ON – The 2025 ONPHA Conference is set to bring together nearly 1,000 housing professionals, policymakers, government representatives, and private sector partners for one of Ontario's leading events dedicated to the future of community housing. This year's theme, Housing at the Heart, underscores the critical role housing plays in shaping the health, safety, and prosperity of communities across Ontario.

With 30 sessions and 3 key plenaries, the conference will bring together diverse voices to engage in crucial conversations about the future of housing in Ontario. Every year, this event serves as a hub for thought leadership, strategic partnerships, and actionable insights, where the tough conversations happen, and where sector leaders can collaborate to drive meaningful change in community housing.

“Ontario’s community housing sector has the solutions we need to address the housing crisis. With $38 billion in assets and deep expertise, we are ready to partner with the right stakeholders, including government, to ensure these solutions reach Ontarians where they matter most. The ONPHA Conference is the perfect place to build those connections and create the synergies needed to make real, lasting change,” said Marlene Coffey, CEO of ONPHA.

Attendees can choose from 30 dynamic sessions and attend three key plenaries, addressing a broad range of topics including housing affordability, policy innovation, and sustainability in the housing sector.
